The purpose of this study was to examine the prevalence of homozygous methylenetetrahydrofolate reductase (MTHFR) 677C>T genotypes and associated risk of homocysteine-related disorders in a population in a remote area of the Arctic. The data from 446 Greenlanders living in Qaanaatsut, an area in Greenland (NWT) were compared to 1194 individuals from Nuuk, the capital of Greenland (EU), and 1092 individuals from a southern region (SOU) in the Faeroe Islands. The prevalence of MTHFR 677TT was 7.7%, 9.6%, and 12.1%, and the prevalence of MTHFR 1298CC was 76.4%, 70.2% and 82.5% in NWT, EU and SOU, respectively. The prevalence of MTHFR 677TT and MTHFR 1298CC in the total population was 27.6% and 63.7%, respectively. The prevalence of MTHFR 677TT in females was higher than in males (4.3% vs. 6.2%). The prevalence of MTHFR 677TT was higher in females than in males, especially in the EU (11.6% vs. 5.1%) and SOU (4.9% vs. 2.4%). This study showed that the frequency of MTHFR 677TT was low among Greenlanders. This allele might have been introduced by immigration. The prevalence of MTHFR 1298CC was high

Beyond these, venture capital investment continues to rise rapidly, a long-held belief in Europe but a developing story in the US, where VC investment has, in many cases, doubled in the last four years. So, what makes it worth funding? Chartbeat founder and CEO Pete Blackburn tells his story of why he's invested in startups. 1. "Big data" revolution The industry is changing, with investment shifting from 'big bang' startups, where the company is built and launched, to 'big bang' data startups, where a product is built to be sold and the business is driven. This happens at a time when consumers are embracing the 'big data' revolution with the launch of Apple Watch and Amazon's new video hub. This has, in turn, been followed by an increase in the number of companies using data to give customers real time feedback, to target advertising, and to offer a better service. 2. "Late stage" success Venture capital funds are becoming the investment destination for companies that have had huge success but have yet to go public. Blackburn explains: "There's no right time to go public, so for founders choosing to take this route, having raised $10m of VC funding is a huge boost to their ability to build their business. These funds are often taken by founders who have built a business and then have scaled out aggressively. They've also raised rounds of $10m or more at Series A or later, and now they're ready to build the company to the next stage and the public market." 3. Who else is investing? Chartbeat is joining this trend and is the first company in its sector to go public. It joins other tech giants in the US who are investing in companies that are building on their back catalogs and have scaled. 4. Valuation Venture capital firms are valuing their portfolio companies at levels that are " 50b96ab0b6
