Load up on an over-the-counter hangover cure, though, and it might just turn into the best way to build a nasty headache the next morning. Check out the pics to see why it's taking over the liquor store. During the Wild Card game against the San Francisco Giants, pitcher Mark Buehrle took a curveball from Tim Lincecum during his start. They are BFF's, having been teammates for several years before either of them moved to the Marlins. Buehrle said the only thing he remembered about the curveball, besides the fact it was thrown by the captain of the team, was it was kind of a flat swinger, and it was thrown right at his head. He still went on to pitch a perfect game in the clinching game of the National League Championship Series. His daughter was in the stands that day and she told Buehrle the next day, "I can't believe it wasn't the flu." Buehrle said, "No, that was the Dodgers." He never told anyone about it and, apparently, Lincecum never told his teammate, Buehrle, about it. They were both teammates with the Chicago White Sox for a brief time back in 2010. The Marlins won the World Series that year with Buehrle. Buehrle's family and friends will have to forgive him for the next day's hangover after he finally told them about
