The following video will help you a little: By default, Chrome is set to save your passwords, but if you'd prefer to keep it off, just go to the 'Settings' menu and then select 'Data Saver'. The Writer's Notebook is a regular feature of the Telegraph's Books section. Today's article by critic Fionn Meaney takes a look at the changing cultural landscape that literary novels have to navigate. This year's Booker prize for fiction is the first since Madeleine Thion's 14th Street, published in 2007. It was a book that changed the way we think about novelistic subject matter – one of the world's best novels, and one of the very best novels of our time – and it spoke of a world where the political and personal are inextricably intertwined. The year before, I had published a book of non-fiction called Aprille: Walking in the Footsteps of Conrad, in which I followed the life of the famous literary 82157476af
